

This summer the Simpsons went to Italy.

Every day mum, dad and the kids Banana and Delbert went to the beach. There was a beach vendor. They bought sunglasses, some sun cream, beach towels and flip flops for Delbert. Then they built a sandcastle with their sand toys. Mum and dad lay in the deckchair under the beach umbrella. In the afternoons they usually swam in the pool with their goggles on. In the evenings they sometimes went shopping. Mum bought a new hat and a bikini for herself. On the last day of the holidays they went to the beach again. There they went surfing on their surfboards and ate a coconut. After that mum and dad lay in the sun and Delbert and Banana ran to the sea. They played beach ball in the water. Suddenly Banana cried, "What's that?" She pointed at an octopus next to her. "Oh no! A furious octopus," shouted Delbert. It was much too late to get away. The octopus was getting really furious. He covered Banana and Delbert in black ink. The ink was on their heads and legs and arms. It was everywhere. Suddenly the octopus hugged the kids with all its tentacles. "Help us!" cried Banana. Mum and dad heard the screams. They ran into the water and hit the furious octopus.

At that moment Delbert woke up. It had just been a bad dream.